DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT (extract)

« I'm a 34 year old film Director and I've spent almost half of my life on movie sets, dealt with pressure and time tables, actor's and crew member's demands, with the urge to fulfill my artistic vision on the screen.

I served a full combat service in the IDF, and unfortunately, I've found myself in life or death situations, in which I had to make harsh decisions. I've traveled the world, had somewhat crazy experiences, and I live in Israel, a boiling pressure pot. And with all my life experience, I'm dead scared of the underwater world.

Now, 'Dead Scared' is quite accurate - although I'm fascinated with this world, and with the people who have the courage to try and become part of this magnificent and magical hidden piece of existence.

Come to think of it, I'm not that special , since most people in the world are afraid of what they don't know, whether its the underwater world, people who are different, or even a foreign language or a challenge that forces someone to get out of his or hers comfort zone.

A Pnoia deals in these situations. A foreign woman, trapped in a mail oriented society, which is not willing to give her a fair chance, maybe due to fear or just plain old aggressiveness. And she's not just a foreigner; her origins bring a historic load, she's has a language issue, and when the real-estate shark tries to take away her home, everything becomes more difficult. The only place she feels at home is the underwater world...»
