SYNOPSIS

In contemporary Vietnam, Thao is an imaginative teacher married into a traditional family. She has an unfulfilled interest in sketching. Her husband Minh, a busy financial investor, and his parents are waiting for her to give birth to a son to continue the family lineage, but Thao has a sudden miscarriage. Depressed by her family's apathy and coldness, Thao flees from the city to a village surrounded by pristine wilderness and primal caves. While seeking inspiration for her sketches, she finds herself strongly attracted to Van - a mysterious, lonely cave-trekker with an inscrutable charm. Thao convinces Van to accompany her in the exploration of a cave, not knowing this will lead to a once-in-a-lifetime experience: discovering a hidden cave and unleashing their inner desires. Minh suddenly shows up, looking for Thao. Torn between responsibility and desire, Thao decides to escape from both and find her own life.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

« Ever since I was a child, I had been told the myth of our primal ancestors - the story of the AU CO Mother who gave birth to one hundred eggs and hatched one hundred sons. I have always been fascinated with this goddess-like woman in a field of eggs. It provokes in me complex feelings, I was both scared and amazed whenever I visualize the story in my mind. Growing up, I realize these myths and legends impose the sole maternal role onto women over and over again. But I want to understand more about other power and responsibilities that women carry. I want to explore it in a contemporary context: What do modern-day women think about pregnancy and childbirth? How do modern-day women treat prejudice and traditional values? What do they dream to create - other than those traditional ideas of "incubating the descendants"?

From the start of the project, I have collaborated with a female creative producer who resonates with the character Thao in many ways. She shares the perspective of a woman who grew up in a similar environment and could relate to Thao's personal struggle. I realize the journey to develop this film is also my journey to listen and understand more about the perspective of modern women and about what they want in life. This process allows me to tell this story with a multi-dimensional perspective and to connect the mythical elements in culture and nature with the reality I am living in. »
